

Patterns of Time

A Batik Apprenticeship Experience

HERITAGE BAY

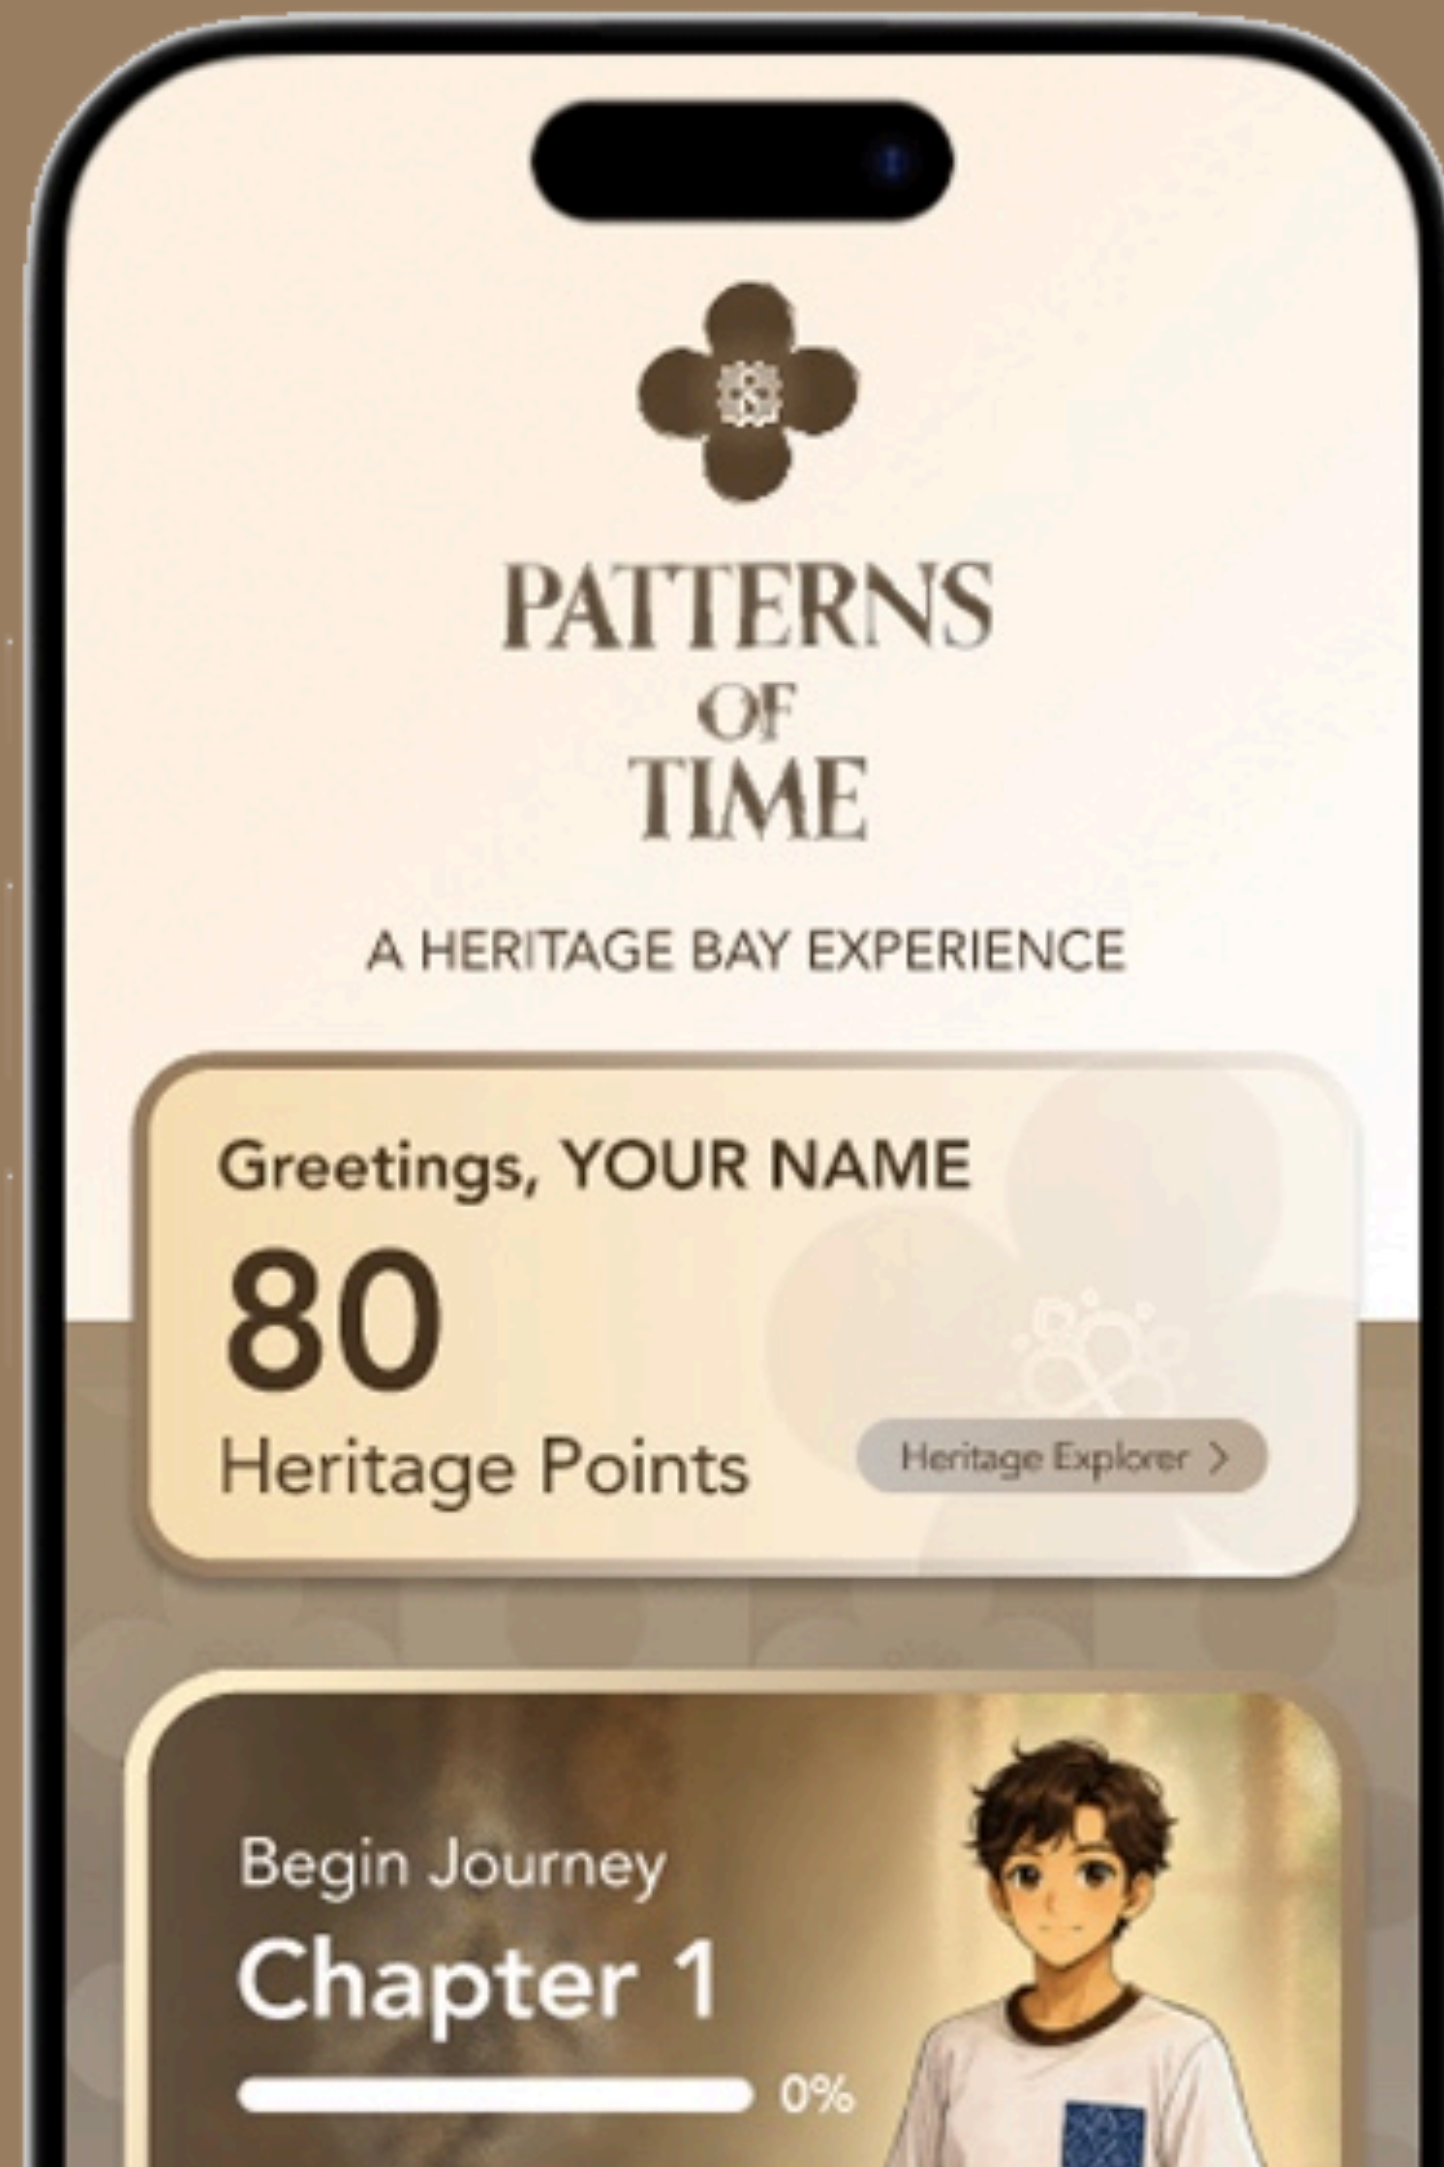

The Original Idea

A digital interactive story game where youths took on the role of an apprentice and made choices that shaped their journey while learning about batik and cultural preservation.

Insights from Assignment 2

Digital Engagement Worked

The story game successfully made heritage more interactive through choice-driven participation, mini-games, storytelling and Heritage Points.

Insights from Assignment 2

The Game Became The Main Experience

The campaign became heavily centred around the story game, which risked making the digital experience more prominent than the physical heritage and craft.

Insights from Assignment 2

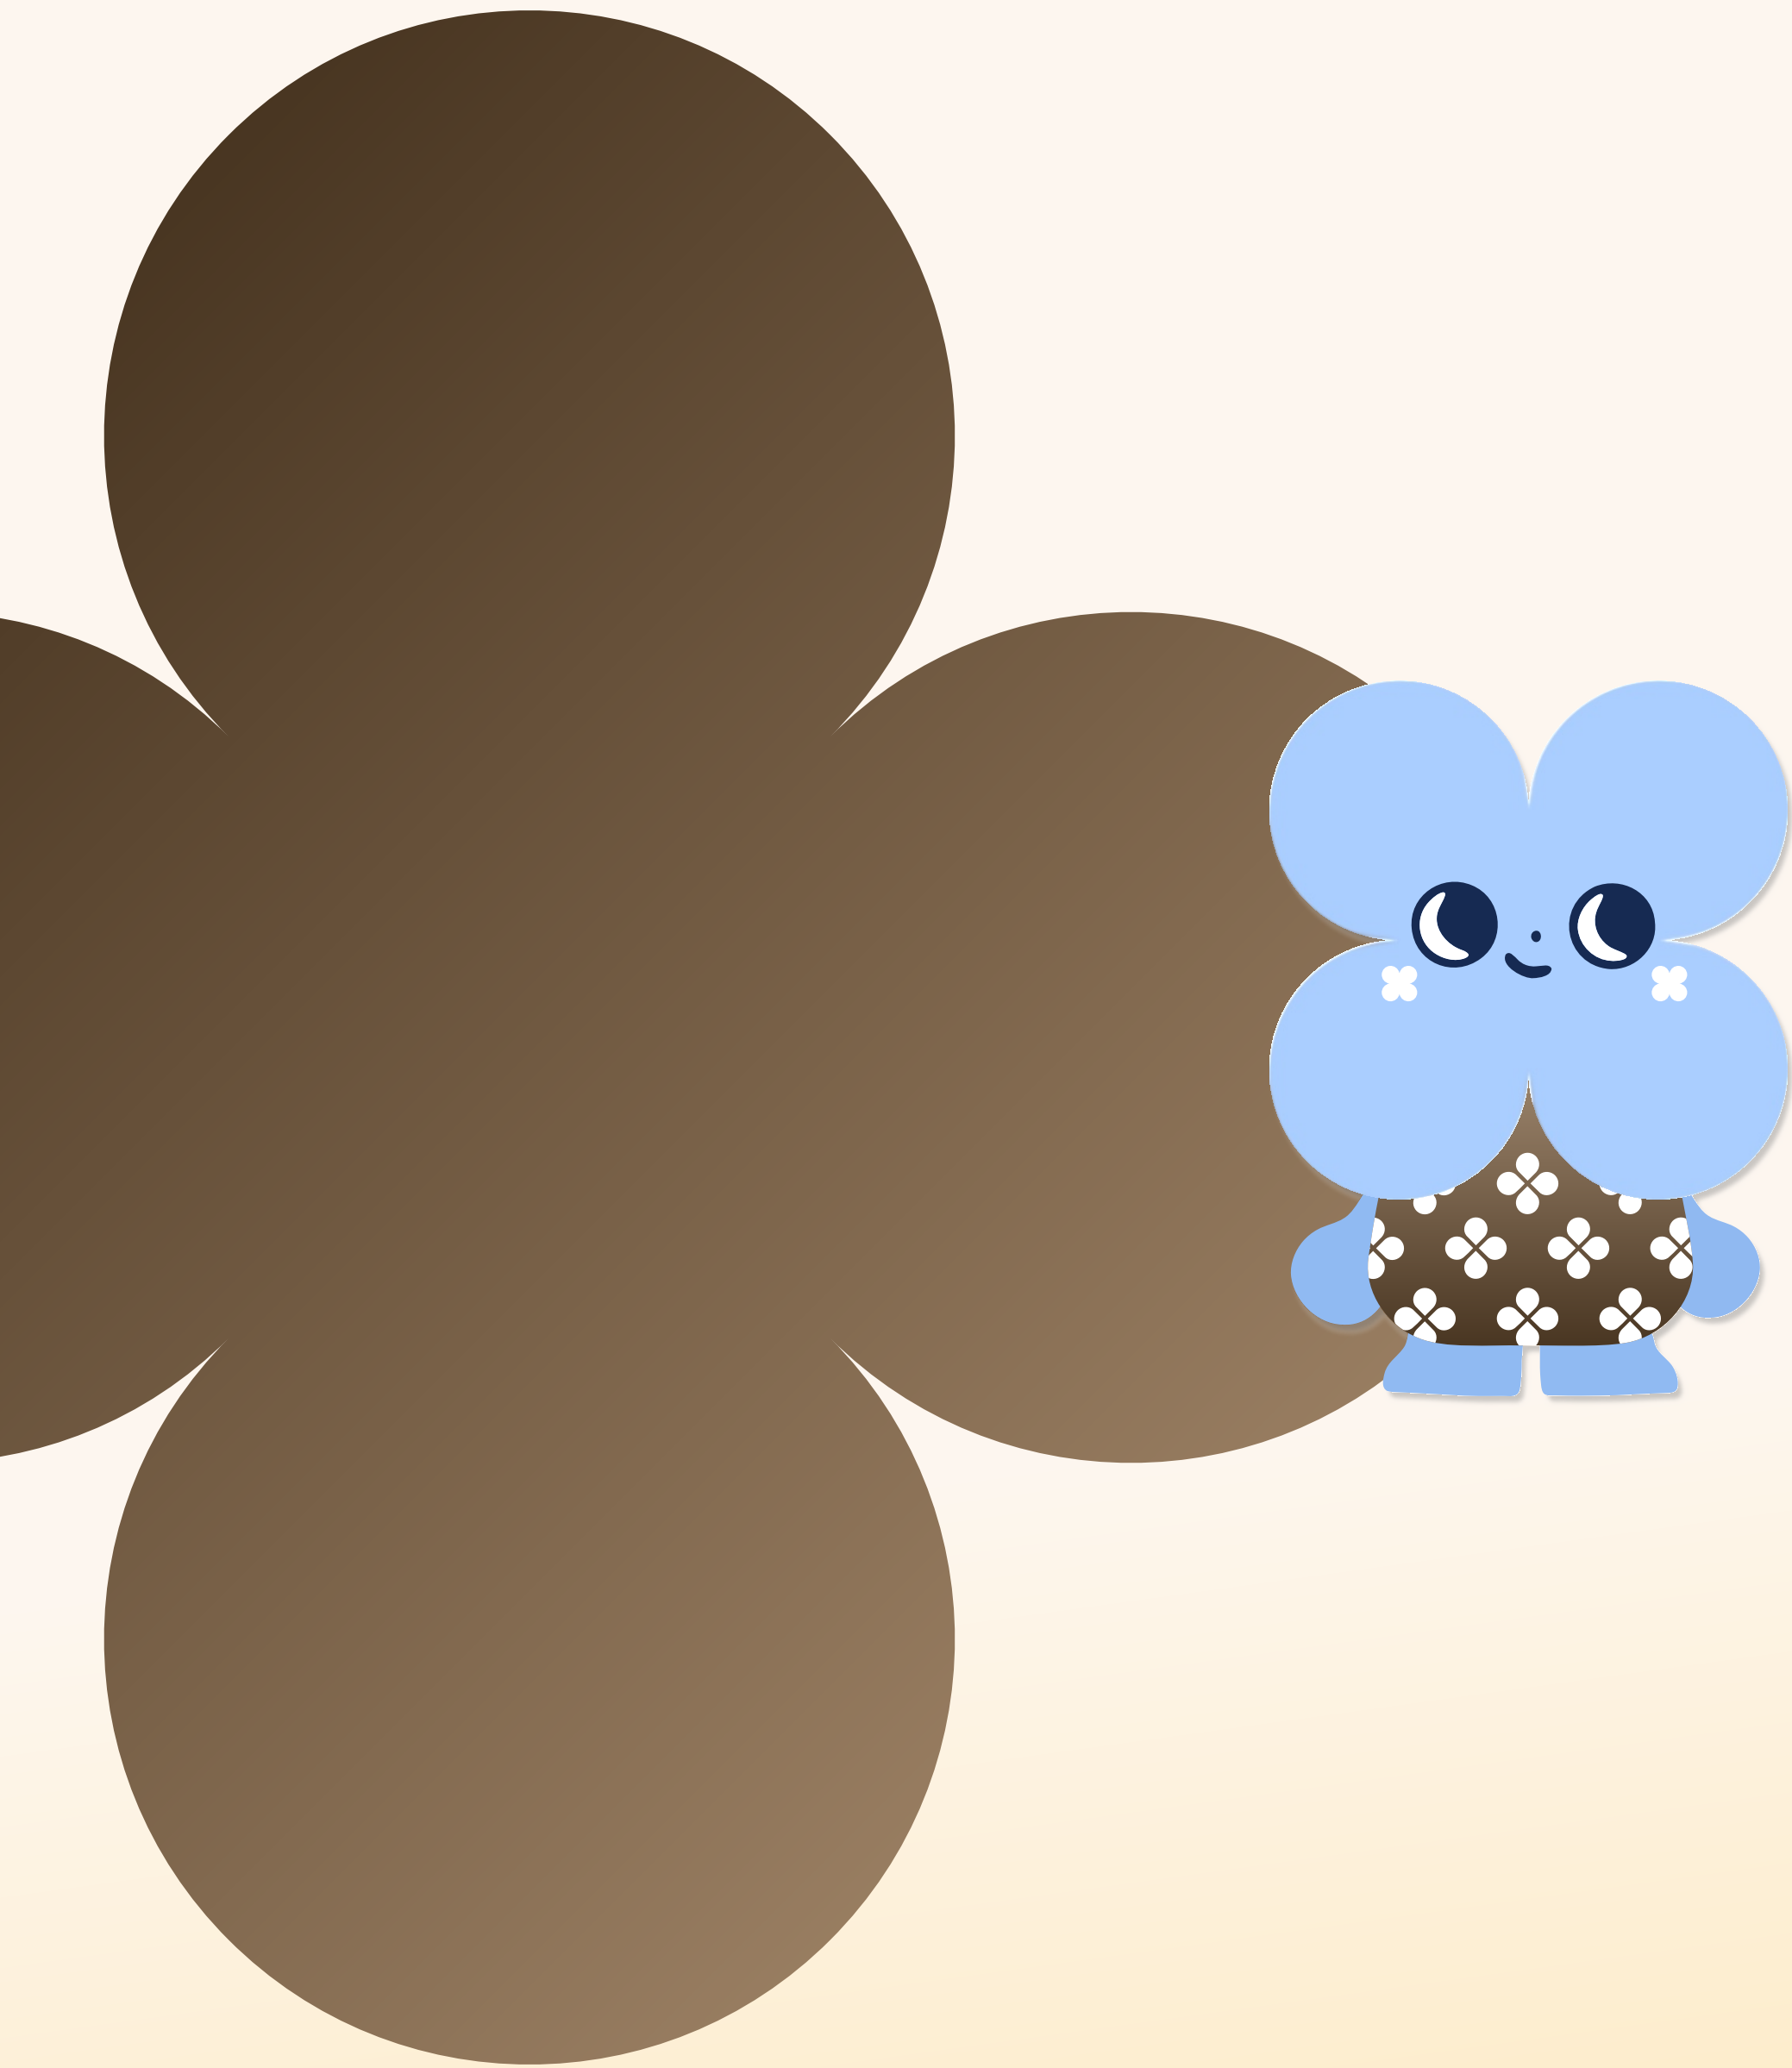

Rewards Could Overshadow Heritage

Our journey revealed a tension between gamification and cultural learning. Users could potentially make choices based on rewards or business logic rather than the heritage values behind them.

The App Lacked Long-term Purpose

The original campaign was designed around a temporary story game and did not have a clear product discovery or purchase pathway, limiting its value to Heritage Bay beyond the campaign.

The Refined Idea

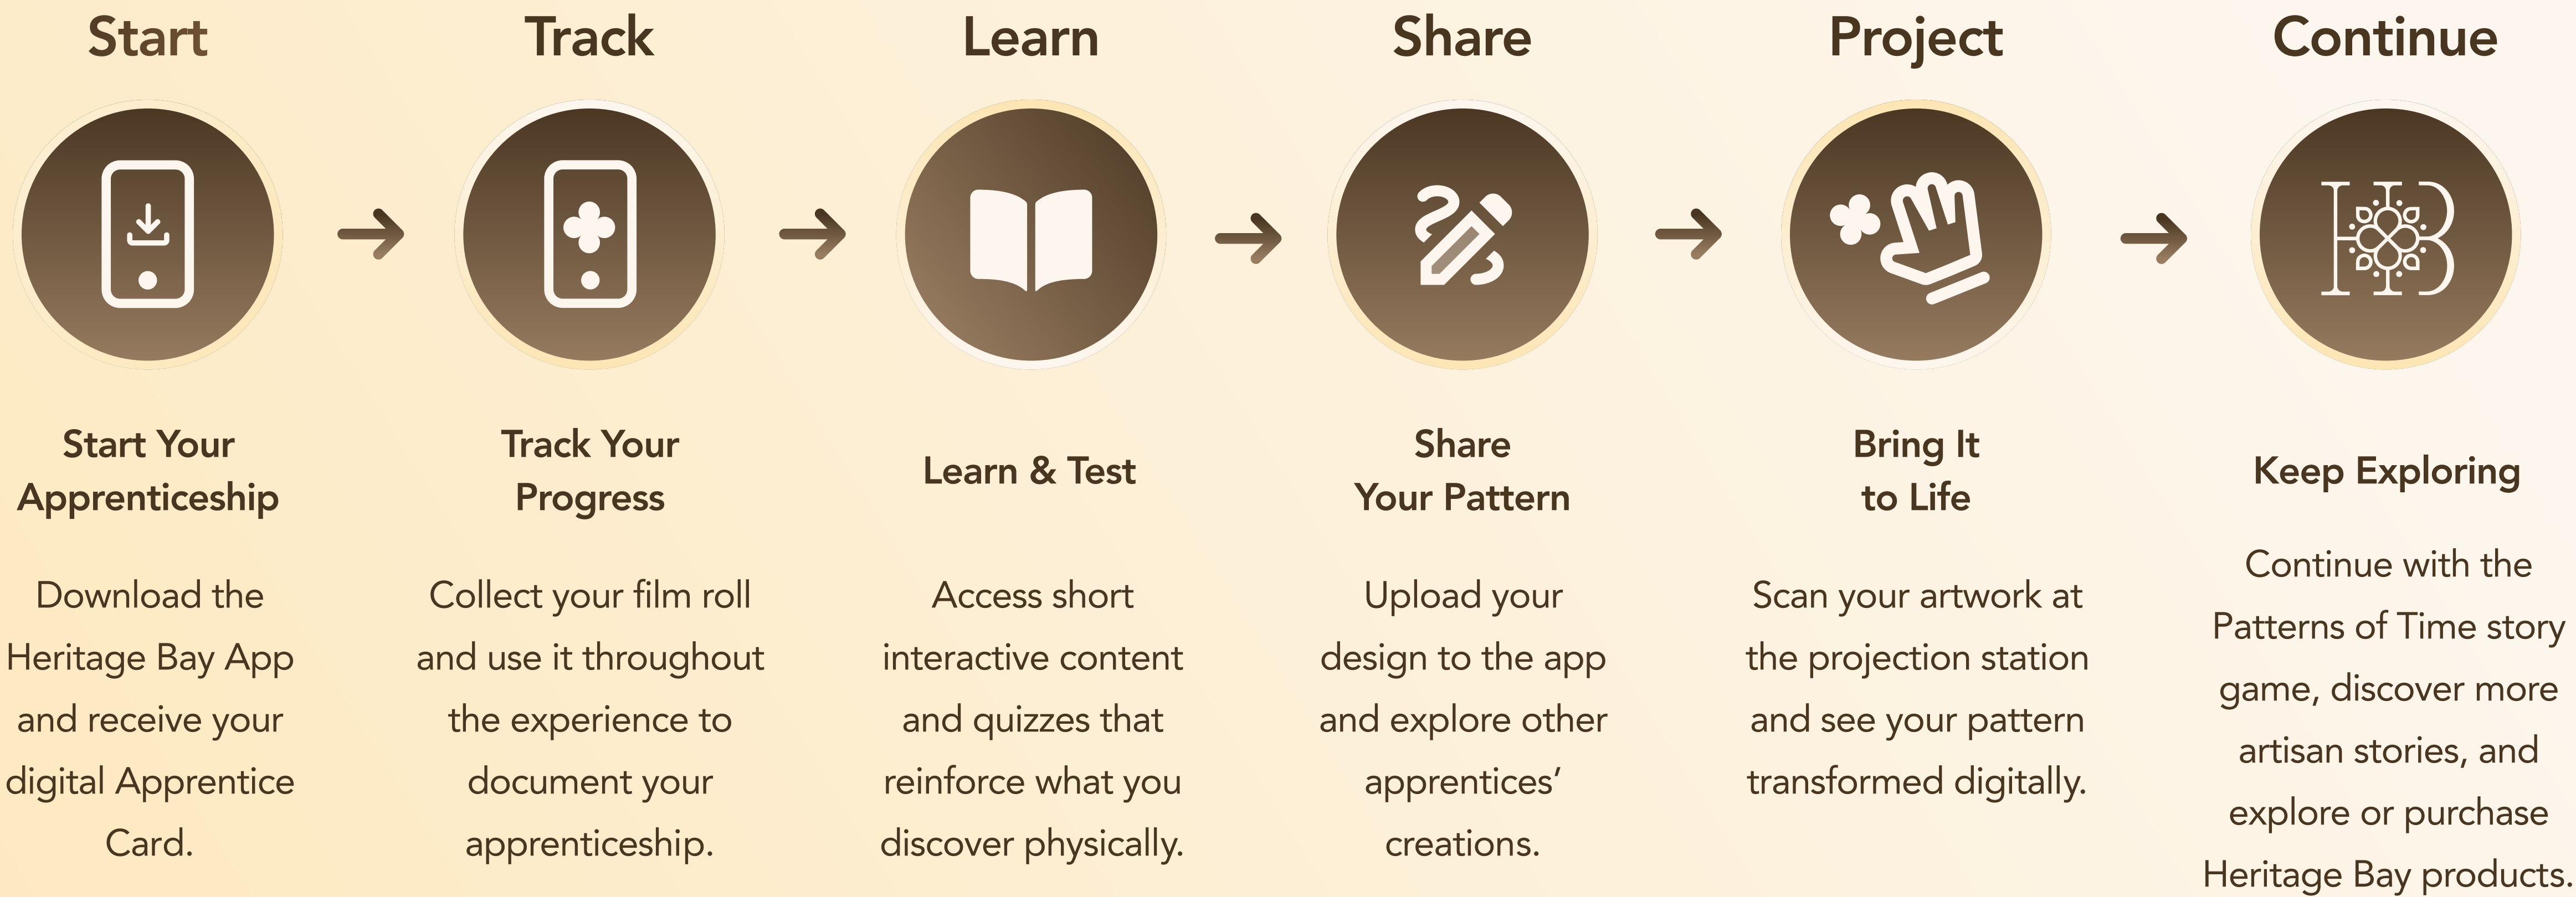

A physical-first apprenticeship experience where youths learn about batik, discover artisan stories, practice the craft and create their own patterns, supported by the Heritage Bay app. Their digital Apprentice Card tracks their progress, while the app extends the experience through artisan stories, the Patterns of Time story game and Heritage Bay product discovery and purchase.

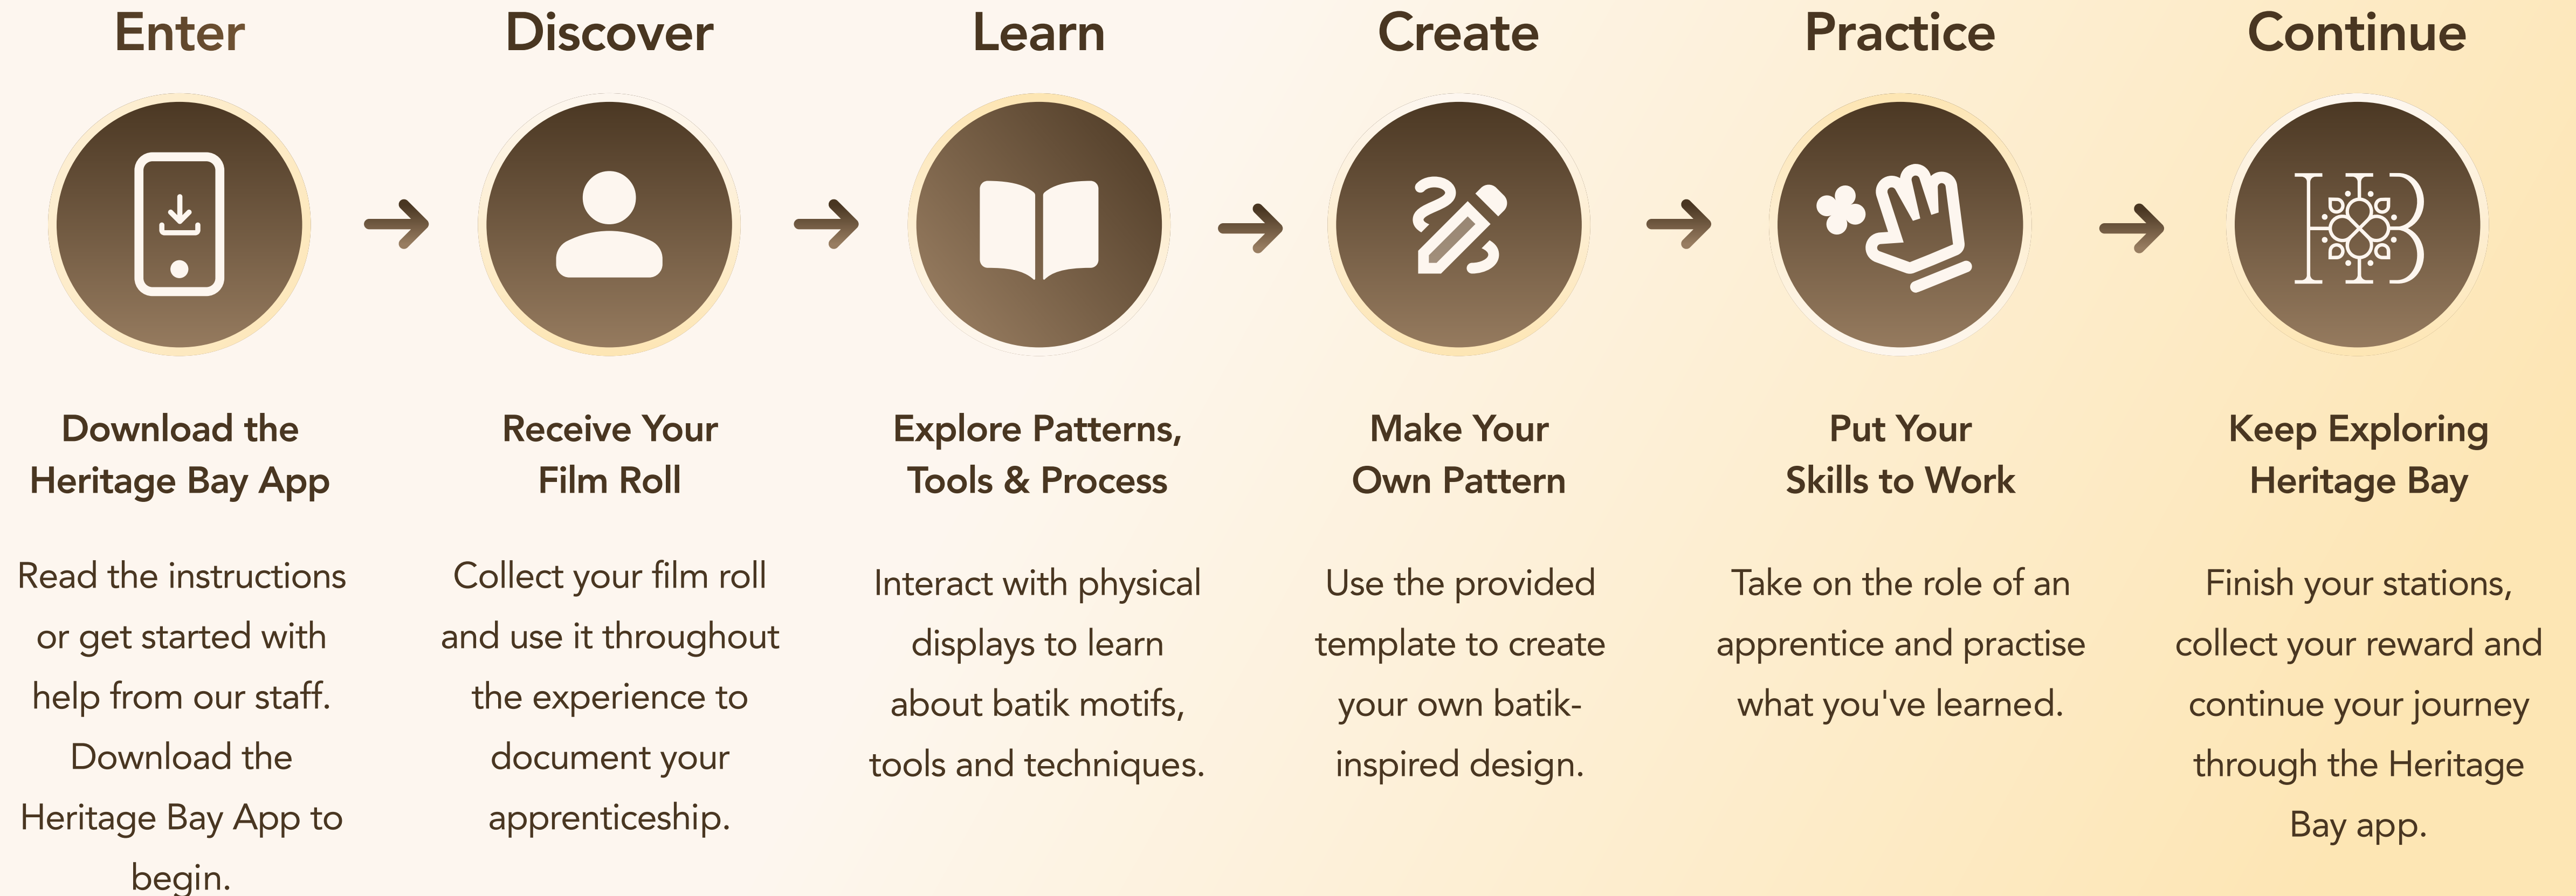

How do users discover the campaign?

Users discover Patterns of Time through Heritage Bay's social media and digital promotions, then visit the physical experience to begin their apprenticeship.

Physical Experience

Physical Experience Model

Bringing the apprenticeship experience into the physical space.

Kora

CAMPAIGN MASCOT

Kora was designed as a friendly guide throughout the Patterns of Time experience, helping make batik heritage feel more approachable and engaging for younger audiences.

Her name comes from the Indonesian word “corak,” meaning pattern or motif, reflecting the central role of batik patterns throughout the campaign. We shortened it to “Kora” to create a name that feels simple, memorable and accessible to both Indonesian and non-Indonesian audiences.

Bringing The Experience To Life

Physical touchpoints designed to support the apprenticeship journey.

Patterns of Meaning: Voting Board

Not only helps to engage visitors, but also helps Heritage Bay gain customer insights into which Batik pattern(s) are popular and can thus create greater supplies to increase sales.

Collectables - Film Roll Keychain, zine and stickers

Visitors can bring these back as souvenirs and memories, reinforcing brand identity as they look back at their journey through this experience.

What happens after the apprenticeship?

After completing all the stations, visitors leave with their filled film roll, drawstring bag and a deeper understanding of batik, its patterns and the craft process.

1

Leave with their creation

Take their completed film roll and drawstring bag home.

2

Explore more

Browse and purchase Heritage Bay products at the physical store section, or continue exploring through the app.

Why This Experience Matters

FOR USERS

Creating value for youths and Heritage Bay

Learn by Doing

Experience batik through hands-on activities rather than only consuming information digitally.

Connect with the Craft

Meet artisans and understand the stories and meanings behind batik patterns.

Create Something Personal

Design and practise their own pattern, giving them a personal connection to the craft.

Why This Experience Matters

FOR
HERITAGE BAY

Creating value for youths and Heritage Bay

Engage Younger Audiences

Create a more interactive and accessible way for youths to experience Indonesian batik heritage.

Promote Artisan Stories

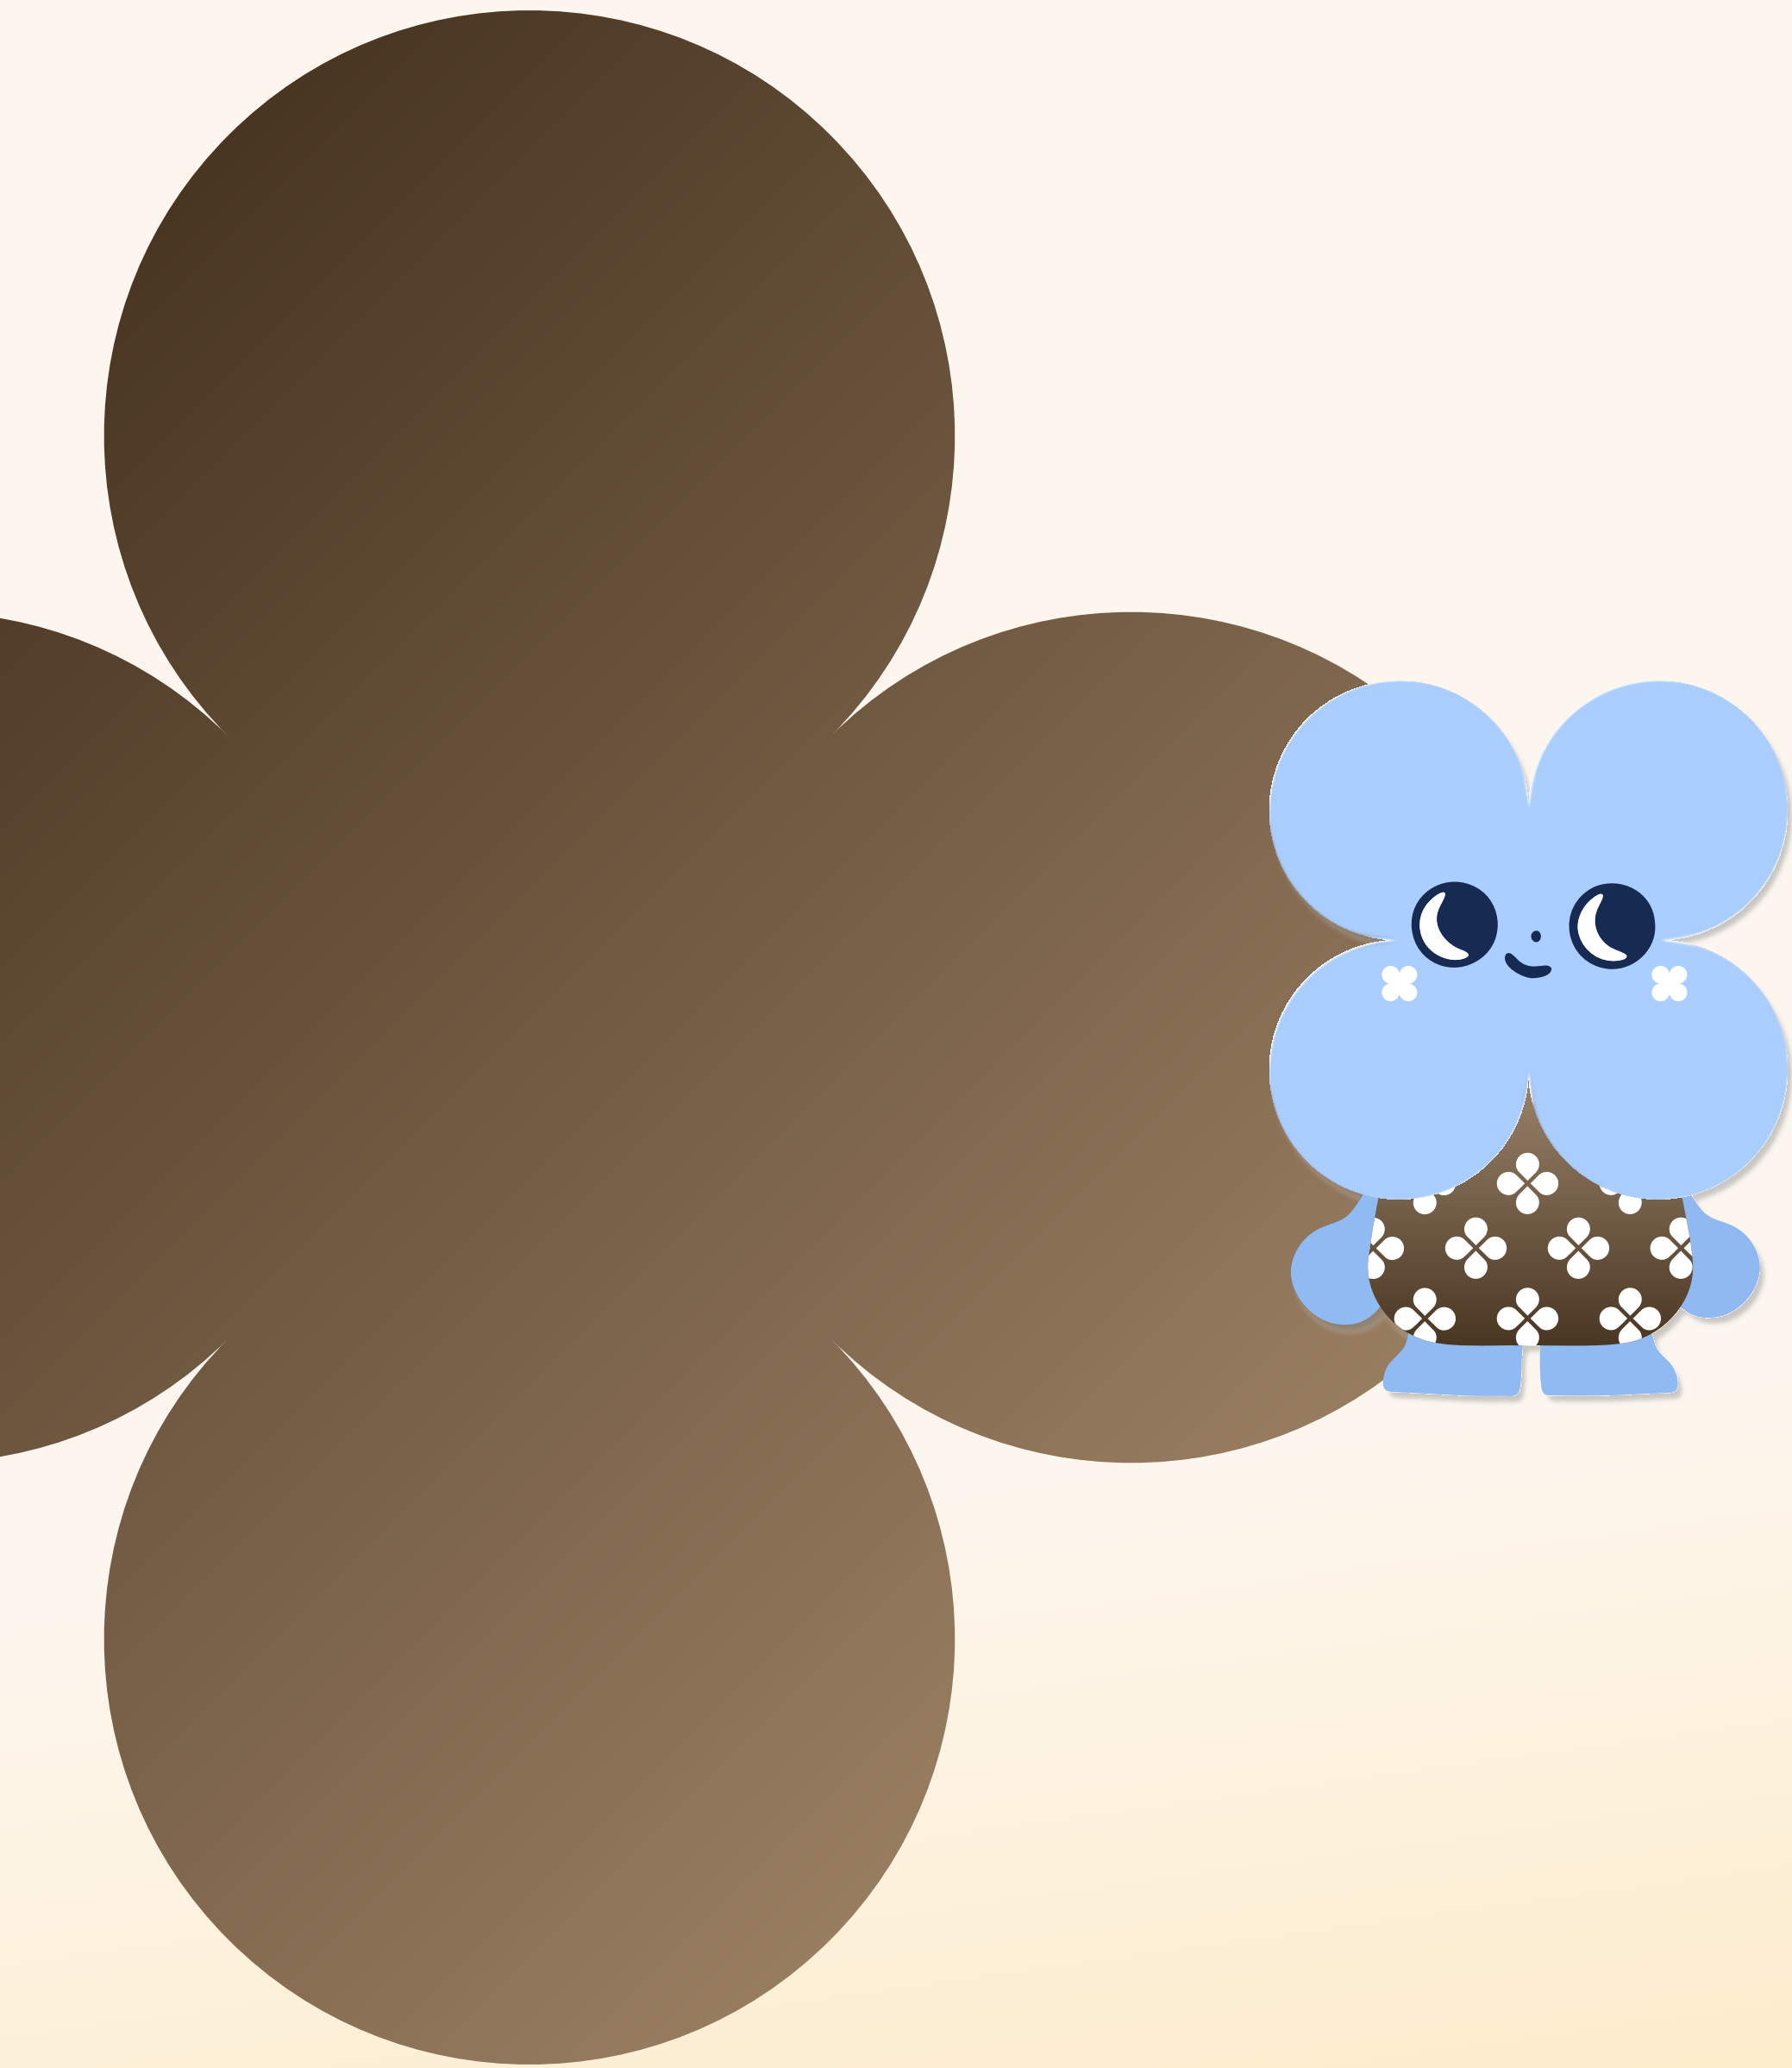

Give artisans and their craft greater visibility through the physical experience and app.

Connect Heritage to Products

Users can discover the meaning behind motifs and then explore related Heritage Bay products, creating a natural pathway to purchase.

Build Long-Term Value

The Heritage Bay app remains useful beyond the temporary campaign, providing a platform for future stories, products and experiences.
